PHILADELPHIA.

"William Penn's Town".

We "land" at the Broad Street station.

And then to the "Bellevue Stratford".

Where we learn of Oysters, Red Snappers and Scrapple.

All truly Philadelphian and delicious.

Now Philadelphia, if you please, is the home of "first things".
For example, the first American flag was made here by Betsy Ross, in 1777.

And in Independence Hall Washington was declared commander-in-chief of the American Army in 1775.

And on July 4, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was adopted here and four days later read from the balcony to the people assembled in the streets.

America's Intrepid Tourist, who in the last one hundred years has visited all the world's fairs without fear or favor and with great applause.

Within a stone's throw from Independence Hall stands the largest and finest printing house in the land---the home of three of our most popular journals.

And now a Philadelphia fire. This ~~one~~ was not staged for the camera. It's a real one.

Broad Street, at once a highway for aristocracy and commerce.

Chestnut Street, the home of small smart shops; the real heart of Philadelphia.

Market Street. A no uncertain boundary between "dude" and "doer". For cries the aristocrat no one "lives" above Market Street.

On Market Street are great department stores, one of them a monument to the man who originated the "Department Store" and made him the greatest merchant of his time.

William Penn standing upon his own tower looks down upon his town reared in the faith of the Quakers and grown to America's third city.

The home of Free Masonry in Philadelphia, the Masonic Temple.

Arabic is the architectural arrangement of Lu Lu Temple.
Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Philadelphia has been termed the "Red City" because of its blocks upon blocks of city dwellings, all alike-- ad infinitum.

The grave of Benjamin Franklin in Old Christ Church burying ground.

Here stood the noble tree under which Wm. Penn made his famous treaty with the Indians - a treaty never sworn to and never broken.

Home of John Bartram - the first American botanist - 1731.

Wm. Penn House.
Tradition doesn't record its construction, but knowing Wm. Penn as we do, he probably made a very satisfactory arrangement--for himself.

The old Walnut Street Theatre.
The oldest theatre in the land and the home of the drama in America.

Tame pigeons seem to be part of the life of every big city.

Fairmount park, Philadelphia's greatest playground, was probably the first public park in America. Divided by the Schuylkill River, it abounds in natural beauties.

Many fine examples of the sculptor's art adorn the different parks.
Statue of Dickens and Little Nell.

Washington Monument, by Siemering, of Berlin.

Grant Cottage. Used by the famous general at City Point, 1864-65.

Jeanne D' Arc, by Emmanuel Fremiet.

The father of the American Navy.
Commodore John Barry. Probably not mentioned in German school books.

Valley Forge. On December 17, 1777, after the battles of Brandywine and Germantown camped here the American army under General Washington.

General Washington's Headquarters.

All that remains of Fort Washington.

The Pennsylvania Column.

A tribute to Mad Anthony Wayne.

Washington Memorial Chapel.
